Ghana's version on the seminar for Mission Idea Contest 2 was held at All Nations University College from 23 – 24, March 2012. The seminar which was the first of its kind in Ghana in such a contest that has to do with innovation and creativity as far as Nano - Satellites are concern. The seminar brought together engineering lecturers and students, engineers from the communication industry and journalists from the media amounting to 57 in total.

Day 1 of the seminar involved the briefing of participants the main aims or objectives and the idea behind MIC and later a briefing on the report of MIC 1. Series of questions were asked concerning the final papers submitted for MIC 1

Day 2 involved a presentation detailing the requirements, categories involved in MIC 2 for the first part of the seminar the final 40 minutes was used in grouping the participants to come out with some few missions and the results was very impressive as most of them never knew anything about satellite mission but was able to develop some mission.

In summary, the participants including the engineers from the industry expressed their interest in MIC 2 as they think it will help them to develop and be more creative in their mission design.

It is my hope that Ghana will have very creative and innovative submission towards MIC 2.
